Rule or Ruin

THE obstructionists may probably succeed in putting the court out of business, but it is doubtful whether they will have gained anything that will be of value to them, and when the citizens who were induced to sign the petition for an injunction come to realize just what will be gained thereby, it is probable they will feel like hiring a muscular man to kick them with some vigor.

There was no possibility at any time of the county losing anything by reason of the $4,000 loan. If the county commissioners had authority of law for making it, they were simply drawing in advance to the amount of $4,000 on the taxes due December first. And if they were not authorized by law to make the loan, then it is simply a question between the commissioners individually and the State National bank, as to which shall have to lose it, and the county does not figure in it at all.

What then was to be gained by enjoining the commissioners from using the money? Simply this—that the ousted officials thought it would strengthen their case for them to "hold up" the county as a highwayman holds up a train. But will it have that effect? Will their cause be made any more popular with the people by the fact that they have been able to devise obstructive measures enough to tie the hands of the court and practically paralyze the public business of the county?

The jail is full of prisoners awaiting trial, but if the court must go out of business for want of funds these persons must be held in prison and maintained at the public expense till the next term of court, which cannot be held till this year's taxes come in. The single item of feeding these prisoners for three months, on the cheapest stuff that can be made to serve the purpose will amount to more than it would cost to run the court till they could be tried. Can the taxpayers who were induced to sign the petition for an injunction figure out from this where or how their injunction can save anything to the county?

The idea that this step was taken "in the interest of the public" is nonsense of the very thinnest sort, and if the "taxpayers" were induced to go into the matter for any such purpose their signatures were obtained under false pretenses.

Indictments have been found by the grand jury against the ex-treasurer for embezzlement of public funds, and against the ex-superintendent of schools for embezzlement and assault with intent to kill. The first purpose of the injunction was to force the court to suspend business on the criminal side before these cases could be reached; and the second was to show the people of the county that although the gang was not allowed to run the business of the county any longer, it was still able to prevent anybody else from doing anything—that if it could not rule, it would ruin.

A Case in Point

A WELL known business man of Albuquerque said to the Journal yesterday: "While the newspapers are saying so much about life insurance in a general way, let me tell you about a particular case, in which I was interested myself: I took out a ten-year policy with one of the big companies a little more than ten years ago for five thousand dollars, and was given a verbal guarantee by the agent that when the policy matured the earnings on my premiums would bring the amount to be received by me up to twice the amount of the sum I should have paid in. Well, my policy has matured, and has been cashed, and the amount I received was exactly the amount I paid in premiums during the ten years, without a cent for interest or earnings. Now if that was not a case of obtaining money under false pretenses, what would you call it?"

We pass the conundrum up to Mr. McCurdy, who will probably be able to prove to the aggrieved gentleman that a life insurance company is a great philanthropic institution, from which the policy holder should not expect to reap any profit.

THE New Mexican thinks it probable that the congress of the United States at its coming session will pass an act prohibiting gambling in the territories, and says: "This situation is similar to that which led congress to pass the Edmunds law and every one knows by this time that the federal authorities enforce the Edmunds law very rigidly and will enforce any anti-gambling law which may be passed for the protection of the youth of the two territories against the insidious effects of legalized gambling devices."

SECRETARY TAFT says that he had fished whale to eat at that Tokyo banquet. A man who can tell fish yarns like this is going to make a strong bid for the Grover Cleveland vote in 1908.—Atlanta Journal.

Roosevelt and Football

HERE is nothing surprising in the fact that President Roosevelt should have taken a hand in the movement to eliminate brutality from the game of football. After settling an anthracite coal miners' strike, involving several hundred thousand men, and engineering peace between two great nations that were tearing at each other's throats, there is nothing singular in the president's harboring ambitions to do even more valiant deeds. Why should not this momentous subject be turned over to Mr. Roosevelt for solution?

Under any other administration than the present, says the Kansas City Journal, it would excite a vast deal of amusement if the president of the United States should invite into consultation the athletic advisers of the leading institutions of learning to discuss how roughness may be eliminated from a student's game. But it seems the natural thing for President Roosevelt to do. He allows nothing to escape him. From one thing to another he flits, smoothing out wrinkles here, exposing fraud and graft there, demanding reforms in another direction, getting right down among his people and making their troubles his own.

The brutality of football is its crying evil. That it is brutal each season's record of broken bones and mangled bodies shows. The country has almost despaired of the college men themselves improving the game, as no effort has been made recently to change the rules in order to decrease the danger. Spectators have demanded "open formation" rules but the managers of the game insist on mauling their players in a way to make accidents and wilful slugging inevitable. It is to be hoped that President Roosevelt may be able to get the football leaders together and demand their signatures to a protocol for peace and humanity upon the football field.

IT MIGHT be just as well, perhaps, if we would all freely admit that the twentieth century has started out with an organized body of gentlemen adventurers who have the pirates of the eighteenth century scuttled and sunk so deep that not even the masts are visible.—Los Angeles Times.

The government is advertising for a "supervisor of Indian music." Those who have heard the painted Navajo give the Ya-be-cha fully agree with Uncle Sam that such an officer is needed. Now if the government would kindly rustle a supervisor of dog and cat music and vocal trainer for burros
 the people would appreciate it.

A number of New York divines are busily manifesting the fabric, as to whether angels are masculine or feminine. As if there could be any doubt on that question in the mind of a man with any acquaintance with the fair
 sex.

The Tucson Citizen says that three of the leading members of the Pima

How They Told Each Other.
 The cruel war is over. Minister Takahira has informed the state department at Washington that he has been notified by the grand keeper of the records at Tokyo that the Mikado has informed that official that he has signed the treaty of Washington. At least Tak told it to the second assistant secretary of state,
 who instructed the first assistant secretary to tell it to the secretary. The state department at once notified the American embassy at St. Petersburg, and Spencer Edly, the charge d'affaires
 there, proceeded to inform M.
 Witte that he was requested to notify the czar's private secretary to impart to the czar the fact that the Mikado had affixed his John Henry to the document.

Mr. Romanoff then told his secretary to tell Witte to notify the French foreign office that the Russian emperor had signed his copy of the treaty. The French foreign office at once got busy and notified its minister at Tokyo, who nearly sprained his ankle telling the great news to the Japanese foreign office.

And the whole bunch knew it all the time.

Papa—Of course not, darling.
 There are no artificial whales.

 "You have an indulgent husband, haven't you, Mrs. De Lash?"

 I'm really afraid he indulges—er—
 too much."—Cleveland Leader.
